

Second Series of a Diary in America: With Remarks on Its Institutions (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Second Series of a Diary in America: With Remarks on Its Institutions
IN this chapter I shall confine myself to the emigration to the United States, reserving that to Canada until I remark upon that colony. In discussing this question I have no statistics to refer to, and must, therefore, confine myself to general observations. What the amount of emigration from the Old Continent to the United States may be at present I do not think the Americans them selves can tell, as many who arrive at New York go on to the Ca nadas. The emigrants are, however, principally English, Irish, and German latterly, the emigration to New South Wales, New Zealand, and particularly Texas, has reduced the in ux of emigrants to the United States.
