Not illustrated. 1836 Excerpt: ...corps are disposed of, the enemy will turn his attention to Ciudad Rodrigo, and the frontiers of Portugal. I intend, therefore, in a few days, that is to say, as soon as I can disembarass the advanced divisions of the army of their sick, which I have begun, to put the army in march to cross the Tagus. I think I shall leave one division upon the Tagus; for if the Duque del Parque and the Duque de Alburquerque are destroyed, which is not unlikely, and indeed, is pretty certain, unless the enemy should enter Estremadura by the Puerto del Pico, instead of by the Puerto de Banos, we must expect that the enemy will immediately cross the Tagus, and we must make our arrangements for the defence of Portugal, according to the plan we settled when I was at Lisbon, to be adopted when the enemys reinforcements should arrive in Spain. In respect to the remainder of the army, I should put the right in Guarda, and the left towards Viseu, and your troops might be in second line behind us. Murray will write to DUrban more fully, as well upon Major General Sir Benjamin DUrban, K.C.B., then the Quarter Master General of the Portuguese army. this disposition as upon the route that the army will take, which it probably might be necessary to clear a little for us. Believe me, &c. Marshal Beresford. Wellington. Pray make Villiers acquainted with the contents of this letter.1 Lieut. General Viscount Wellington, K.B., to the Right Hon. John Villiers. My Dear Villiers, Badajoz, 20th November, 1809. The enclosures in my dispatches to England, relative to the French fleet, will have relieved you from any anxiety respecting its operations. I understand that all which came out have either been taken or destroyed. I consider it very desirable, however, to put t...
